CLASS COMMITTEE

CHARLES EDWIN STRATTON, Class Secretary
JOHN DAVIS WILLIAMS

The Secretary's address is 70 State Street, Boston, Mass.

THOMAS TODD CO., PRINTERS, BOSTON

70 State Street,
Boston, June 14, 1921.

Classmates:—

Here is your Quinquennial, smaller than the last one, naturally, as you have had a little book each year since 1916.

Since last Commencement, Derby and Thorndike have left us. Requiescant in pace.

You will find at the end of the book a list of our sons who are alumni of Harvard. There are still two "back counties" to be heard from, Wheeler's youngest son and Haskins's boy, whose picture is inserted as a frontispiece.

I hope you will not only pardon all faults of omission and commission you may find in the book, but also do me the kindness to notify me of the same.

Deus vobiscum.

Yours affectionately,

Charles E. Stratton,
Class Secretary.

RECORD OF THE CLASS

SAMUEL APPLETON BROWNE ABBOTT. Born March 6, 1846.

He is still living at Villa Lontana, Rome. The Class will share the Secretary's disappointment at not getting a line from him, and in learning that he will not be with us to celebrate our Fifty-fifth Anniversary.

* DANIEL PUTNAM ABERCROMBIE. Born at Lunenburg, Mass., January 21, 1844. Died at Belmont, Mass., December 20, 1919.

* FRANCIS BENJAMIN ARNOLD. Born June 25, 1844. Died at Rome, Italy, February 5, 1906.

* ELISHA DILLINGHAM BANGS. Born at Brewster, Mass., September 29, 1844. Died at Winchester, Mass., September 19, 1900.

* BENSON BERIAH BANKER. Born at East Chazy, N. Y., March 19, 1843. Died at Boston, Mass., February 28, 1913.

GEORGE BATCHELOR. Born July 3, 1836.

He has continued to live in Cambridge, and to contribute articles to the Press. In answer to the Secretary's circular, he writes: "I have already sized up the Class in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin.* The surviving members of my family now number twenty, and there is not a crooked stick among them. Next to them as a source of enjoyment I put the Class of '66. I shall probably not be able to dine with the Class, but I hope to meet all survivors at the house of our honorable classmate and friend, Col. Hayes. Long may he hold the scales of justice, even for rich and poor drinkers and agents of prohibition.'' In another letter he says, ''As the darkies used to sing, 'I am inching along like a poor inch worm.' 'The Class Cradle,' of which Farlow made the model, is on my mantelpiece, waiting to go into the bank vault for the Summer.''

He records the death of ''One grandson, Arthur Irving Nash, a noble youth, died in the full tide of successful activity, in New Bedford, suddenly.''

He rejoices in one great-grandchild, Roland Allen Wells, born March 1, 1920.

*GEORGE CONWAY BENT. Born at Boston, July 11, 1844. Died at Germantown, Pa., October 4, 1909.

*WILLIAM BLAIKIE. Born at York, Livingston County, N. Y., May 24, 1843. Died at New York City, December 6, 1904.

HENRY GORHAM BLAIR. Born November 12, 1843.

He continues to live at Chicago, and writes: ''Can think of nothing of interest to tell. My life has been very quiet of late.''

WILLIAM PAYNE BLAKE. Born July 23, 1846.

He has continued to live in Boston, and writes: ''I am glad to say that I am in the best of health, and am thoroughly enjoying life. I thank my classmates heartily for their cordial appreciation of my early verses.''

The Secretary, and doubtless others of our Class, were pained to notice an omission in the last stanza of the copy of the Sophomore Class Supper Ode, recently sent us by our classmate. With all due respect to United States Commissioner Hayes, I give here the missing lines:

> ''Now with the sparkling, ruddy wine
> Fill every brimming glass,
> And gladly let us all combine
> To pledge our noble Class.''

The Secretary feels obliged to add that our classmate is the champion swimmer in the Young Men's Christian Association.

* HENRY THATCHER BOUTWELL. Born at Hancock, N. H., August 20, 1844. Died at Los Angeles, Cal., December 21, 1915.

* HOLDER BORDEN BOWEN. Born at Providence, R. I., June 3, 1844. Died at Providence, R. I., October 14, 1911.

* JOHN DOMINIS BREWER. Born at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, July 30, 1845. Died at Honolulu, July 12, 1878.

* JOSEPH EMMONS BRIGGS. Born at Dighton, Mass., April 6, 1842. Died at Burlington, Ia., May 4, 1867.

* CHARLES BROOKS BRIGHAM. Born at Boston, January 17, 1845. Died at San Francisco, August 24, 1903.

* NATHANIEL FRANCIS BRIGHT. Born at Watertown, Mass., July 22, 1844. Died at Cambridge, Mass., July 8, 1880.

* HENRY WALLER BRINCKERHOFF. Born at Sing Sing, now Ossining, N. Y., May 22, 1845. Died at Brooklyn, N. Y., September 7, 1909.

* FREDERICK JOHN BROWN. Born at Baltimore, Md., March 11, 1846. Died at Baltimore, June 9, 1900.

* HENRY FOSTER BUSWELL. Born at Bradford, N. H., March 1, 1842. Died at Stoughton, Mass., September 13, 1919.

* EDWARD AUGUSTUS CAPEN. Born at Boston, March 19, 1844. Died at North Tonawanda, N. Y., February 4, 1905.

* FRANCIS AUGUSTUS CARPENTER. Born at Foxboro, Mass., May 26, 1843. Died at Foxboro, December 7, 1867.

JAMES EMERSON CARPENTER. Born November 7, 1843. He has continued to live in New York City, and writes: "It is many moons, as you know, since I have had the pleasure of a visit to my beloved Cambridge and Boston. I still hope, however, to repeat my visit at no very far off day. The railroad trip to Boston, I regret to say, will prevent my attendance with our classmates at the Somerset Club and at 8 Park Street. Particularly I shall miss the hospitality of that good fellow of ours, Colonel Hayes, at his delightful home, and right here let me extend to you, to him and family and to each and every one of our classmates hearty greetings, joined with the hope that I shall meet them all at Commencement of our good old Alma Mater the coming year, and that meanwhile all will enjoy the best of health and happiness withal.

"Briefly, my breakdown turned out to be a matter of nerves, why and wherefore I cannot say. At all events, I am not quite up to long distance travel at present, though I go out daily for an automobile ride."

* ALBERTSON CASE. Born at Greenport, N. Y., July 9, 1843. Died at Southold, N. Y., April 12, 1915.

ALBION CATE. Born November 18, 1845.

He writes: "Thanks for the kindness of my classmates, I am well, still on the job; rise at 5 A. M., breakfast at 6, walk a mile across Washington, one of our most beautiful parks, to the L. — can't abide the surface lines — punch the clock at 8, work harder than I ever before worked until 4 P. M., then return by the same route; supper, read something choice, and hit the hay about 8 P. M. Of course labor conditions are rather quiet just now, but I generally find something to do that is useful. I am contented and happy, so you see I keep canonical hours. I owe my appointment to His Excellency, Frank O. Lowden, and have held it for two years. It keeps me occupied and gives me car fare and lunch money. My vacation assignment is from October 1st to 15th. May take a run to salt water for a few days during that period, during which I hope to meet you, but I want to clean up my desk and cover a certain point before proceeding. With regards to all, and best wishes."

* GEORGE FREDERICK CHACE. Born at Taunton, Mass., April 14, 1845. Died at Taunton, February 24, 1910.

* EDWARD HENRY CLARK. Born at Cincinnati, Ohio, July 10, 1843. Died at New York City, April 13, 1885.

* JOHN CLARK. Born at Boston, August 1, 1844. Died at Cambridge, Mass., July 22, 1870.

* THEODORE MINOT CLARK. Born at Boston, August 20, 1845. Died at Boston, April 30, 1909.

* JOHN HENRY COPPENHAGEN. Born at Dorchester, now a part of Boston, October 8, 1842. Died at Portsmouth, N. H., August 31, 1900.

* FREDERIC CROWNINSHIELD. Born at Boston, November 27, 1845. Died at Capri, Italy, September 15, 1918.

* JOHN GREEN CURTIS. Born at New York City, October 29, 1844. Died at Chatham, Mass., September 20, 1913.

* FREDERICK DABNEY. Born in the Island of Fayal, August 9, 1846. Died at Boston, July 24, 1892.

* ALLEN DANFORTH. Born at Plymouth, Mass., January 5, 1846. Died at Boston, Mass., July 18, 1909.

* SAMUEL CARROLL DERBY, the son of Dexter and Julia (Piper) Derby, was born in Dublin, N. H., March 3, 1842, and died at Columbus, Ohio, March 25, 1921. He attended the Dublin schools and fitted for College at the New Ipswich (N. H.) Academy. He graduated from Harvard No. 5 in the rank list of our Class.

Because I saw more of him than any other member of our Class, our beloved autocrat, the Class Secretary, has assigned to me the grateful task of paying a tribute to the memory of our classmate, who was for forty years one of the most influential members of the State University of Columbus, Ohio.

He entered its service when it was a small school, and helped to build a great institution of learning. When he became Dean of the College of Arts, Philosophy and Science, there were 5000 volumes in the Library; when he left it, there were 217,000.

Our friendship began in 1863, and was unbroken until he died. I saw him at Ilion, N. Y., where he was teaching in 1866-67, at Antioch College and at Columbus, Ohio. When he came East he always called on me. He was a man of many sorrows, and conspicuous among them was the death by drowning of his only son, a youth of brilliant promise, a senior in the University. He brought the lad to see me in Boston. When we did not meet, we wrote letters. Last Summer he was spending his vacation with his daughter, Mrs. Haigler, at Watertown. He came to spend an hour with me. He ate, drank and talked like a man in vigorous good health, well qualified to become, as we hoped he would be, "the oldest living graduate."

I will limit myself to one reminiscence. Edward Everett Hale, being authorized to appoint a President for Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio, because he was my personal friend, nominated me. With my wife I visited Yellow Springs. Derby was Professor of German and French, and acting President of the College. My intrusion was resented by some of the teachers. But Derby invited us to his home, and showed not a trace of irritation at the slight to himself in ignoring his conspicuous merits as the actual head of the College, and appointing me who had no experience in teaching and no qualifications for such a responsible position. When I declined the nomination, Derby was made President, and held that office until he went to Columbus.

In treating of his forty years of work for the University, we have room for scarcely more than a catalogue of his offices and activities.

In the long memorials put on record by his colleagues, he is described in two aspects, as a friendly neighbor and as a great teacher. Concerning his personal character and influence, we quote a few sentences: "The spiritual flower of Old New England, he struck deep root, too, in Ohio. He looked like Hawthorne, and lived among us in a house like the Seven Gables. He walked to market with his basket, he pruned his own lilacs, and his frugality, his plain living and high thinking were utterly unassumed. He seemed to himself a failure, no doubt. In him it was a real spiritual humility, a real sweetness and sincerity of modesty.'' We are reminded of the remark made by a lady concerning the late Dean Everett of the Harvard Divinity School: ''He is a great man and he doesn't know it.'' The tribute of the faculty closes with the sentence, ''and for us there remains only the old 'Frater ave atque vale,' hail and farewell to one of the gentlest spirits we shall have known.'' This last sentence sounds like an echo of Tennyson's lament for Arthur Hallam, ending with ''the passing of the sweetest soul that ever looked with human eyes.''

There was nothing perfunctory in his teaching and no formality in his relations with his students. His colleagues bear testimony to the wide range and depth of his knowledge, the fineness and breadth of his culture, the inspiring and helpful quality of his teaching and his never-failing friendliness and courtesy in the classroom. ''His standards were high but his sympathies were always warmly human, and students sought places under him because they felt that his scholarship was inwrought with native simple kindliness.''

The Committee of the Faculty who wrote of him said: ''He was of clear New England stock, the son of an old country house. He got his stature plowing a New Hampshire hillside.''

At frequent intervals he returned East to study; at Harvard College in 1876-77; at Johns Hopkins in 1880-81; at Harvard again in 1893-94; also, in 1903-04, he was a student in the American School of Classical Studies in Rome; and again in 1913-14, at the American Academy in Rome. ''He was extremely interested in and a devout student of the domestic life of the ancient Romans and Etruscans.'' But he was just as much interested in the common life of the people of his native place, ''the private life from generation to generation, the family histories, the dates of marriages and deaths of cousins . . . making old letters and town records his vacation play in his Summer visits to his old home, and this interest so much a projection of his own habit of life he transferred to old Rome."

He was a member of the Harvard Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, and his last public address was before the University Chapter of that order in Columbus.

He was a member of the American Historical Association; the American Philological Association; the Ohio Archeological Society, and the New Hampshire Historical Society.

Had he lived until July 4, he would have become a member of the Massachusetts Society of the Cincinnati, as great-great-grandnephew of Major Samuel Darby, of York, Me., an original member of the Society, who left no male lineal descendants. He would have made the number of our classmates in this Society five, the other four being, Storey, Hayes, Haskins and F. R. Stoddard.

He left many unpublished essays and addresses concerning the subjects which interested the members of these societies. Of them the Committee writes, "There are many of these in manuscript and these are surely now for the University to publish."

He was a teacher of languages for half a century, and it was said of him that he read with zest Greek, Latin, French, German, Spanish and Italian, and for two score years he taught them so effectively that his pupils always held him in affectionate remembrance and now mourn his loss as an irreparable calamity. "Two years ago many of his old students returned to celebrate his seventy-seventh birthday with a dinner party."

Last year he wrote (letter not preserved) that he was not yet Emeritus, but had been released from routine work in the classroom. He was meeting a few students for research work. For his own pleasure he was reading Seneca and comparing his moral ideas with those of St. Paul. He asked if our young people were reading anything but stories and magazines.

When he came to see me last, he told me about the little farm in Dublin, which he and his sister inherited from revered parents.

His widow, the daughter of Dr. Leonard, of Hillsboro, N. H., lives at Columbus with one daughter, Miss Margaret Leonard Derby; Mrs. Oscar E. Carr, of Yellow Springs, Ohio, and Mrs. Charles E. Haigler, of Watertown, Mass., are the other daughters. He was one "who marched breast high never doubting" — with Hamlet he would have said "the readiness is all." We have had our heroes; we now bid farewell to our simple-hearted gentleman and notable scholar. Like the lovable old Col. Newcome, his answer to the last summons might have been adsum as he passed out of darkness into light.

G. B.

LEWIS SEAVER DIXON. Born September 26, 1845.

He has continued to live in Boston, and is still in practice there as an oculist. He writes: "Very thankful to be able to say that Time has dealt very kindly with me, leaving me in good health, with only a few 'slight squeaks, occasionally, in the machinery'."

* EATON SYLVESTER DRONE. Born at Zanesville, Ohio, January 25, 1842. Died there February 2, 1919.

ALEXANDER DONLEY DUNBAR. Born March 21, 1846.

He has continued to reside at Peekskill, N. Y., where he is still Superintendent of Schools. He writes: "There is little of interest to the classmates in my life and activities, except perhaps that I am alive and well. I am still in Peekskill and in charge of educational work, trying to adapt myself to the new ideals in which vocational has displaced classical, physical takes place of intellectual, supervised play instead of supervised study, laxity instead of discipline, the utilitarian and narrow instead of the cultural and liberal. Possibly, as in other directions, the new is better than the old. The next generation will decide.

"My wife's health has not been good for some time; still we hope to celebrate our semi-centennial next year. My own health continues good and I expect to attend the reunion with all that joyous word implies. Good wishes for all."

* THOMAS DWIGHT. Born at Boston, October 13, 1843. Died at Nahant, Mass., September 8, 1911.

EDWARD WALDO EMERSON. Born July 10, 1844.

He has continued to live in Concord in the Spring and latter Autumn; July, August and September in his house on the southern slope of Monadnock; in Winter he seeks a warmer climate "in the sheltering mountains at Tryon, N. C." His daughter Ellen and his son Raymond both served in France in the War. He writes: "The years are treating me kindly. I am well and can walk vigorously for a few miles, but not as in college days with Tom Ward, Sam Hoar, or with Storey, Hayes or other guest for over Sunday, from Harvard Square up the turnpike to Concord, keeping up the four-miles-an-hour gait. At the mandate of the somewhat celebrated Saturday Club of Boston my work has been, since our last meeting, the writing the history of that remarkable crystallization of friends for a monthly dinner at Parker's, which began in 1857. The first volume was published in 1918, and I am working on the second, a most interesting task and a pleasure, but I foresee that some younger man will have to finish it."

* GEORGE FREDERIC EMERY. Born at Paris, Me., April 29, 1845. Died at San Francisco, December 20, 1873.

* WILLIAM GILSON FARLOW. Born at Boston, December 17, 1844. Died at Cambridge, June 3, 1919.

* EDWIN FARNHAM. Born at Philadelphia, Pa., September 6, 1842. Died at Cambridge, April 16, 1911.

EDWARD NICOLL FENNO. Born November 4, 1845.

He has continued to live at Boston in the Winter, and at Falmouth, Mass., in the Summer. He writes: "I only wish I had some interesting things to tell you about myself but, as one gets older, life for most of us does not afford many exciting episodes. In a recent number of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin I read an article by our wisest and most venerable classmate in which he states, that in order to reach a vigorous old age such as he is enjoying, one must neither have indulged in too vigorous physical exercises nor in too strenuous mental exertion, but must have pursued a calmer middle course. (In mediis tutissimus ibis.)

"I have not indeed reached the four score years and four of our beloved classmate, but I am doing fairly well at three score and fifteen and, with the needed help of a walking stick, get about with more or less pleasure and can still hoe my potato patch and flower beds down on my sand hill on the Cape where I spend about six months in the year, alternating between the aforesaid hoeings and recubans sub tegmine fagi.

"If I continue in my present condition of mind and body I hope to dine with the good old boys of '66 June 22nd at the Somerset Club and try to be cheerful in spite of old age and the Volstead Law, and the following day to go in the conveyance provided by the Class Fund to the home of our genial and distinguished classmate."

AMOS KIDDER FISKE. Born May 12, 1842.

For nearly four years he continued to live in New York, but for more than a year he has lived in Cambridge with his daughters, and he is looking forward to meeting us all at our Commencement celebration.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS FLAGG. Born May 2, 1845.

He has continued to live at Holliston, Mass., with an office at Boston.

* SAMUEL QUARLES FRENCH. Born at Amesbury, Mass., September 1, 1845. Died at Hornellsville, N. Y., May 27, 1872.

* JUSTIN EDWARDS GALE. Born at Rockport, Mass., November 10, 1843. Died at Weston, Mass., April 3, 1918.

* JAMES SMITH GARLAND. Born at Franklin, N. H., September 14, 1842. Died at Minneapolis, September 1, 1913.

* WILLIAM AUSTIN GOODMAN. Born at Cincinnati, Ohio, February 2, 1845. Died at Cincinnati, October 3, 1912.

* FRANCIS CALLEY GRAY. Born at Boston, September 5, 1846. Died at Boston, February 13, 1904.

* EUGENE DOUGLASS GREENLEAF. Born at Boston, August 19, 1844. Died at Boston, November 16, 1914.

* RICHARD CRANCH GREENLEAF. Born at Boston, February 12, 1845. Died at Lawrence, Long Island, N. Y., December 3, 1913.

JAMES BARTLETT GREGG. Born April 15, 1846.

He has continued to reside in Brookline, Mass., and to accumulate grandchildren. He writes: "In excellent health and spirits, but with increasing unsteadiness of gait, not due to recent legislation."

* FRANCIS AUGUSTINE HARRIS. Born at Ashland, Mass., March 5, 1845. Died at Winthrop, Mass., January 18, 1911.

* WILLIAM ABRAHAM HASKELL. Born at Hillsborough, Ill., June 22, 1845. Died at Alton, Ill., July 13, 1916.

DAVID GREENE HASKINS, JR. Born March 5, 1845.

He has continued to live in Wayland, Mass., and to practise law in Boston. He writes: "I am revelling in the life of a 'commuter,' (as the New Yorkers call it), with nearly five acres of land, splendid country air, with a nice little garden, and a group of large ancient chestnut trees; all of which I should be glad to show to my classmates, collectively or individually."

* JAMES WILLIAM HAWES. Born at Chatham, Mass., July 9, 1844. Died at Boston, August 31, 1918.

WILLIAM ALLEN HAYES. Born June 29, 1843.

The Secretary has tried in vain to get the Colonel to write something for the Class Book, and, after two or three written communications, ventured to call at the Temple of Justice. In response to his oral solicitation, the Colonel, with a delightful mingling of the kindliness of the friend with the dignity of the magistrate, pointed to something which he was about to paste into his scrap book, and said, "You can print that." It was a long decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, confirming one or more decisions of Commissioner Hayes. The Secretary withdrew, feeling that he should not intrude further upon one whose time was fully occupied with defending what rights the Prohibition Amendment and the Volstead Act have left our once free and happy American people, and, in addition, with cultivating and adorning his estate at Cambridge for our reception on Commencement Day.

* ARTEMAS ROGERS HOLDEN, Jr. Born at Boston, August 31, 1844. Died at Boston, March 15, 1884.

* CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS JONES was born at Worcester, Mass., February 22, 1845, and died at Boston, January 23, 1892.

* GEORGE ADAMS KETTELL. Born at Charlestown, now Boston, May 10, 1846. Died at Brookline, Mass., February 12, 1913.

AMOS MORSE LEONARD. Born October 18, 1840.

He has continued to live at Newton, Mass. He writes me from Orleans, on Cape Cod,—"I came down here ten days ago for a change and rest. We have had the change, but very little rest. I have been plowing and planting a garden (Rusticus arat) and doing many other things. . . . It is very pleasant here; the birds sing from early morn; wild roses, daisies and other flowers border the hard, smooth tar-and-sand roadways that wind along through woods and open spaces with neat white houses here and there, and distant views across the fields and over the Town Cove, with glimpses of Massachusetts Bay and the broad ocean in the distance. In clear weather the Pilgrim Monument in Provincetown can be seen from the rising land back of the house, and flashes of light upon the Barnegat, Highland and Nauset lighthouses. There is salt water bathing in the cove back of the house, boating and fishing, and a small island 500 feet off shore. Good neighbors are near and it is altogether an ideal place for rest and comfort.'' As he is so modest about speaking of himself, the Secretary will say that Leonard is erect in his carriage, vigorous in appearance, plenty of hair still, with plenty of youthful color in it, and altogether carries his eighty years well; and if you don't think he's a good real estate agent, vide supra.

Leonard also writes that he has met a nephew of Hawes, H. C. 1885, who graduated second in a class of 250.

LEWIS CHAMPLIN MURDOCK. Born January 16, 1845.

He has continued to live in New York City, and has added two more grandchildren to the "corker."

* THOMAS NELSON. Born at Boston, March 4, 1845. Died at Boston, November 19, 1897.

* JOHN LEONARD NORTON. Born at Russellville, Ky., November 22, 1844. Died at St. Joseph, Mich., July 17, 1915.

GEORGE LAURIE OSGOOD. Born April 3, 1844.

He is still living in England, and has recently taken the Manor House at Petersham, in Surrey, of which he has sent some pleasing photographs to the Secretary, and writes: "I have little news to send. We are enjoying our new home in this charming, old-fashioned village of Petersham, finding it all we could wish. I am sorry to write that circumstances will prevent my crossing the water this year. I shall be present in the spirit, but that does not lessen my regret at missing the pleasure of a reunion I had looked forward to as a certainty. Our son at Oxford is happy among his new acquaintances, and his violin is in great demand in musical circles. Our youngest is at the Westminster School in London. Affectionate greetings to you and every one."

* ROBERT MENDUM OTIS. Born at Kittery, Me., October 19, 1844. Died at Roslindale (Boston), March 19, 1886.

EDWARD FOSTER PEIRCE. Born October 25, 1844.

He has been living in Newton, coming to his son's store in Boston almost every day. He writes: "I fear I must confess that I am growing old, gracefully I trust. I get comfort from Oliver Wendell Holmes's 'Over the Teacups'. How genial! and how truly he read the changes of thought as we walk on toward eighty years. Our Class Day was June 22. Fifty-five years! and to-night I can see those bright, active forms as they gathered under my Holworthy windows that happy morning. Well, dear Stratton, God bless us all."

* EDWARD CRANCH PERKINS. Born at Cincinnati, Ohio, February 25, 1844. Died at Milton, Mass., December 4, 1914.

THOMAS SERGEANT PERRY. Born January 23, 1845.

He has continued to live in Boston in the Winter, and at Hancock, N. H., in the Summer.

* GEORGE GREENLEAF PRATT. Born at Brewster, Mass., May 6, 1842. Died at Arlington, Mass., May 3, 1890.

* JAMES JACKSON PUTNAM. Born at Boston, October 3, 1846. Died at Boston, November 4, 1918.

* GEORGE FRANCIS ROBINSON. Born at Newport, R. I., July 14, 1843. Died at Kennebunk, Me., April 10, 1914.

* HENRY ROLFE. Born at Farmington, Me., July 30, 1844. Died at Napa, Cal., October 12, 1895.

* WILLIAM STORY SARGENT. Born at Boston, October 4, 1842. Died at Boston, October 17, 1919.

THOMAS PIERPONT SHAW. Born September 27, 1843.

He has continued to live at Lowell, Mass., and writes: "I would gladly be with you June 22nd, if health and strength permitted. Unwilling to add a single discordant note to Emerson's beautiful Song, I will venture no details of personal experiences or reflections, and will only ask you to give my affectionate greeting to each and every member of the Class."

SWITHIN CHANDLER SHORTLIDGE. Born June 8, 1840.

He is living at Media, Pa., and writes: "I am not yet blessed with any great-grandchildren. I have eight grandchildren, the youngest, Margaret, daughter of my son Raphael Johnson and Helen Houghton Shortlidge. Counting the husband of my daughter and the four wives of my four sons, I have ten children living. I am thankful to be able to say that these ten children all seem to be prosperous substantially, spiritually and socially. On June 8th, five days distant, I shall be 81. Beyond the years fit for any lucrative employment, I am blessed with dear ones who miss no opportunity to supply me with every comfort in my old age. With greeting to all of our '66 classmates."

*WILLIAM EDWARD SKILLINGS. Born at Boston, October 23, 1843. Died at Bryant's Pond, Me., June 25, 1910.

FRANCIS RUSSELL STODDARD. Born June 26, 1844.

He writes: "I live six months in Plymouth and six months in New York City. My wife and I have been married fifty-three years. My son, Francis R. Stoddard, Jr., Harvard 1899, is Deputy Superintendent of Insurance of the State of New York. Shall be glad to see any of my classmates in Plymouth this Summer. I am on the Tercentenary Committee for the Celebration of the Landing of the Pilgrims, on the Committee of the Mayflower descendants of New York State, and also to represent Mass. Society of Cincinnati. Try to keep happy with wife, two children, seven grandchildren and one great-grandson."

* WILLIAM PRESCOTT STODDARD. Born at Plymouth, Mass., March 26, 1846. Died at Plymouth, August 18, 1910.

MOORFIELD STOREY. Born March 19, 1845.

He has continued to practise law, and to live at Boston in the Winter, and at Lincoln, Mass., in the Summer.

His daughter, Katharine Donald, died October 14, 1920.

He writes: "During the last five years, I have continued to practise law, with occasional short vacations, which seem to grow shorter and less frequent as the years go on. My health has been very good, and my weight does not vary. I have continued to be at my office daily, and have from time to time contributed to the discussion of public questions, by letters to the newspapers and speeches. I favored the League of Nations, and was very much disappointed at the way in which the Senate dealt with it. I have continued to support the causes with which I have been identified, but I am conscious that my boiler does not generate as much steam as it did some years ago."

CHARLES EDWIN STRATTON. Born November 17, 1846. (Not 1864, as Farlow's Report of 1869 has it.)

He has continued in the practice of the law, and to reside at Boston. He has not increased in the last five years the number of his grandchildren or great-grandchildren. He has to be content with an addition of two to his previous stock of fifteen grandnephews and grandnieces.

* HENRY MARSHALL TATE. Born March 2, 1845. Died at Brooklyn, N. Y., January 7, 1897.

* JOHN WARD TAYLOR. Born at Hebron, Me., August 17, 1840. Died at Hemet, Cal., February 1, 1908.

* JOHN LARKIN THORNDIKE (formerly John Prince Larkin Thorndike) was born in Boston, July 27, 1844, and died at his country place at Manchester, Mass., on October 24, 1920. He traced his descent to John Thorndike of the Manor of Great Carlton and Little Carlton in Lincolnshire, England, who emigrated to this country in 1633 and settled in Ipswich, now Beverly. After dwelling there for some years he returned to England with his daughters and was buried in Westminster Abbey about 1668, near his brother or nephew who was a Prebendary of the Abbey. He left two of his sons here from whom has sprung a vigorous posterity, as the name is closely associated with Beverly and is borne by several well-known families. Thorndike's grandfather was John Prince Thorndike, who came to Boston and built a house on Boylston Street where the Colonial Theatre now stands. Thorndike's father, John Hill Thorndike, was an architect; like his father he was successfully interested in real estate, by which his children profited. Thorndike was educated in the public schools of Boston, entering the Latin School in 1856 and our Class in 1862. He will be remembered by his classmates as a quiet and reserved fellow, not making himself especially prominent, but maintaining pleasant relations with them. From his excellent preparation for college and his natural ability the then prescribed college courses presented no difficulties to him and, although not taking any high rank, he maintained an excellent place in his class. After leaving college he entered the Harvard Law School, from which he was graduated in 1868, and in the same year was admitted to the Bar in Suffolk County. When he entered the Law School his attitude seemed to have changed: the law interested him deeply. Gifted with a very clear brain and a retentive memory, he mastered thoroughly what he read and by exact and careful methods he reaped the full benefit of the course of study he pursued. His first association after being admitted to the Bar was with our classmate Stratton. Later he became associated with the late Francis E. Parker, a well-known lawyer and having the management of large trusts. The business of this office brought to his attention many questions arising under the law relating to trusts and wills, but his time was not so fully occupied as to interfere with his studies, and, as has been very truly said of him, "until he was forty years old his time was largely spent in study and a very intelligent study of the law, the results of which were well arranged in his mind, so that when in 1887 he became a member of the firm (Storey, Thorndike, Palmer and Dodge) with which he was associated for the rest of his life, he was thoroughly equipped for the highest professional work."

In this brief notice I can only say a word of his gratuitous work for improving the practice of the law. This is most admirably referred to in the Resolutions adopted by the meeting of the Bar Association of Boston held in the Supreme Court room after his death and by order of the Court placed upon its records. His loyalty to the court is shown by the provision of his will, by which his law library, consisting largely of English Reports, annotated by himself, was given to the Judges of the Supreme Court, to be known as the Judges' Library, together with a fund sufficient for its maintenance.

As a relief from the arduous labors of his profession Thorndike took great pleasure in his estate at Manchester, his summer home, which he cultivated and adorned with care and intelligence, employing at one time French gardeners and introducing systems of cultivation not usually practised in this country. A part of almost every summer was spent in England and France, to which countries he was particularly attached, and I can recall with interest his description of his visit to the wine growing district of Bordeaux, and have had the pleasure of enjoying more than once what resulted from that trip.

Thorndike never took any part in our Class reunions, and our classmates saw but little of him. He, however, always referred to them pleasantly and he was in equally pleasant relations with many of those residing in this vicinity.

While taking no special interest in public affairs, except so far as it concerned the law, his views on these questions were ever sound and sensible. His conversation was agreeable and entertaining and he was at his best at his own table, where he was a most generous and attentive host. To this brief and inadequate sketch of our classmate, I desire to add, with Storey's permission, the remarks which he made on presenting the Resolutions of the Bar Association in the Supreme Court. It is so admirable, it so truly shows the manner of man Thorndike was, that it should have a place in the records of our Class where it can be read and preserved as a just and fitting tribute to one whom it is a distinction to have had for a classmate.

He was married, June 4, 1878, at Cambridge, to Florence Greenough, daughter of Henry and Frances B. Greenough, who, with one son, two daughters, and several grandchildren, survive him.

W. A. H., 2d.

STOREY'S REMARKS

To the memorial which has been read I would fain add a few words of personal tribute, for of all my friends Thorndike was the oldest, save a few to whom I am connected by blood. I met him first when we both entered the Boston Latin School, sixty-five years ago. We were schoolmates for six years, classmates in College and in the Law School, friends who met socially and always pleasantly, until more than a generation ago we formed the firm which brought us into close and daily intimacy until his death. He has played a great part in my life, and the intimate ties of so many years are not severed lightly.

To those whom he met casually in business or society his manner perhaps seemed formal and reserved. He did not wear his heart upon his sleeve or mingle freely with strangers or accidental acquaintances, but those who enjoyed his friendship knew that beneath his cold exterior he was fond of his kind, fond of conversation and fond of fun. His was not an even or serene temperament, but among his various moods, now earnest and excited in the study of some case, now severe and critical, was a mood of light-hearted merriment in which his laugh was as loud as any.

He liked to welcome his friends, and was at great pains to entertain them well. He was generous to those whom he loved, scrupulously just in his relations with his neighbors, and thoughtful in many ways. Late in his life he told an old friend, who had married on hope with slender resources, that he had for several years kept a sum of money on deposit to lend him when he came to financial grief. He never until then had hinted to his friend that he had made this provision for his needs, which happily was never required. I mention this as an illustration of his kindly thought for others, entirely unknown to them.

His attention was concentrated, not scattered among various interests, but whatever he undertook to do he did as well as it could be done. He did not seem by nature intended to be a horseman, but he resolved to make himself a good rider, and succeeded by diligent effort. As a young man he was an admirable dancer. When he built a house he studied the details with the utmost care. He was fond of books and took pains to get good editions, though he was not a bibliomaniac nor a collector. His methods were sedulously exact whatever the work that he did.

He was wrapped up in his profession, and to it, from the time he opened Blackstone till the end, his life was devoted. I never knew a man whose knowledge was so well arranged, who had such a command of authorities, the contents of whose mind were so fully annotated as his. He kept up with the reports and on the margin of his volumes were ample cross-references. Whatever knowledge he acquired was never lost. He was indefatigable in exhausting a subject. He was a wonderfully skillful draftsman, never using a word because it had been used by others, but knowing exactly what was essential and what was needless verbiage, and choosing his language with unerring exactness and with good taste as well. His mortgages, wills and corporate instruments were models, and he exposed his work to a severe test, for he never used punctuation in his papers, saying that an instrument must be so drawn that its meaning would not depend on a period or a comma, which, wherever it might be placed by the draftsman, might be misplaced by the printer. He considered punctuation as a crutch which a competent lawyer should not need. His practice proved that he was right, and the Stock Exchange of New York, which at first refused to register his securities because they or the mortgages securing them were not punctuated, finally yielded to his arguments. He pointed out that acts of Parliament are never punctuated, and a precedent of such authority was not easily disputed.

He was capable of great and continued labor, and once really interested in a case or a question, he was tireless. He practised law for law's sake, not merely for personal profit, and was ever on the watch to correct mistakes and to simplify legal procedure and make it more efficient. He paid his debt to his profession in a hundred ways, not seeking recognition of his work, but quite content to let who would take the credit, so long as the work was done. Even we who saw him daily did not realize how much labor he devoted to public objects.

He was not without ambition, and would have enjoyed judicial service. No one would have been a better judge on an appellate bench than he, and his strong common sense would have enabled him to deal wisely with questions of fact; but he was not disposed to advertise himself and pursued the even tenor of his way so quietly that his great ability as a lawyer was not recognized by many members of the Bar till he had reached an age when a long judicial career could not have been expected. The community lost a man who would in my opinion have proved a great judge, and my constant discussions with him over questions as they arose in our practice satisfied me that he would have been of the greatest service in the consultations of any court.

He lived the life of a private citizen, seeking and holding no office and courting no public distinction, but none the less rendering to this community great and unacknowledged service, true to the highest standards of the profession which he loved.

appreciated warmly by his clients and by those of his associates at the Bar who learned to know his quality, and leaving behind him a memory which his few surviving contemporaries and these of his juniors who knew him will always cherish.

MELVIN AUGUSTUS UNDERWOOD. Born April 17, 1844.

He has continued to live in Boston. He writes: "I am very glad to be able to report that my general health has greatly improved during the past year, and that the insomnia from which I suffered last year, and for a long time before, is entirely gone—in fact, I now sleep too much instead of too little—and the nervousness is greatly reduced. I am happy to state that I am comparatively well, except that I lack my normal energy and strength. I am sorry to have to report, however, that my deafness has very much increased, so that I am no longer able to enjoy music, or to participate in its performance, which have hitherto been my privilege and delight uninterruptedly ever since my childhood. This is a terrible loss to me, to which I find it very hard to become reconciled. On account of my deafness, I was unable to continue singing in the Harvard Alumni Chorus, of which I had been a member ever since it was organized. On this account, principally, I also resigned this year from the Harvard Musical Association, of which I had been a member since 1913. I thus severed the last tie connecting me with Harvard music, musical people and organizations, commencing with the College choir in 1863, then the Glee Club, of which I was president, or vice-president, the following year, then the Alumni Chorus, and, lastly, the Musical Association—covering altogether a period of 58 years, during which I had been associated with the musical celebrities, students and graduates of Harvard, and intimately so with the noted organist, instructor and composer, the lamented John Knowles Paine, the talented singer, teacher, director and compo·er, our classmate and my chum, George Laurie Osgood—with both of whom I sailed for Europe on our Commencement Day; and the successful tutor, organist and director, the late lamented Warren Andrew Locke, of the Class of 1869.

"The possibility that I mentioned in my letter last year, that I might be retired with an annuity from the United States Customs Service, after a continuous connection with it of over 35 years, became an accomplished fact August 21. I have not been well enough since that time to engage in any business, but have been living quietly at home. I hope and expect to attend the Class Dinner, and there to participate in a thoroughly cheerful and enjoyable celebration of our fifty-fifth anniversary, in spite of the prohibitory amendment and the Volstead Act; to participate also in all the events arranged for us on Commencement Day. I again send my heartiest greetings and best wishes to all my classmates."

His classmates will be pleased to hear that he has fully recovered, and is now enjoying life at a charming Summer retreat in France, of which he has sent the Secretary some delightful pictures. He is somewhat consoled in his inability to meet us at Commencement by the thought that there is no Prohibition Amendment or Volstead Act in liberty-loving France. He sends "love to you and all the boys."

He has continued to live at Worcester, Mass., and writes: "Aside from the troubled times with their various perplexities, political, ethical and economic, which so often cast shadows upon our mood, I have nothing to complain of except failing sight. Everything in the way of education interests me (and there is a good deal of it), for we have a boy in the first year of the Medical School, another a Junior in College, one in Middlesex School in Concord, and a girl graduating from the Mary C. Wheeler School in Providence. These are all good schools, and on the whole I don't see but the world offers increased opportunities to the young in about equal ratio to its increased demands upon the adult. I am now and then ashamed of myself for being so contented in a world in which I do so little, but I did saw two cords of wood—each stick twice—during the Winter."

for the Harvard Endowment Fund that I could wish were on a Carnegie or Rockefeller scale.

"As a matter of fact, I can't be away from my base more than an hour a week, and a long ride in the wind would bring on an access of facial neuralgia, so, my dear friend, I mournfully regret that I shall not see you, and Bill Allen and Moorfield and John D., and all the rest of the whole-souled '66."

* ABBOTT POMEROY WINGATE. Born August 3, 1844. Died May 23, 1864.

'66 UEBER ALLES

To the Editor of the Bulletin:

The Class of '66 looks forward to its Eleventh Quinquennial Dinner next June. About that time I, the oldest member of the Class, shall be eighty-five years old, and the youngest one, seventy-five. Of the 113 graduated in '66, 32 survive, ranging in age from seventy-five to eighty-five years. Of these, the majority are well employed in honorable pursuits. A few after long service have retired to enjoy the otium cum dignitate of a well-spent life.

A list of the survivors brings to view three obvious facts.

First: All the noisy wine drinkers, who once made serious speech-making at our dinners difficult, are gone.

Second: The strong men, the leaders in athletic sports, are no longer with us. Over-strained hearts caused some of them to die suddenly, and others to survive for a time as invalids.

Third: The death rate is less for the best scholars than for the Class in general.

The moral is three-fold: Temperance in drinking, moderation in physical exertion, and intellectual activity are favorable to longevity.

GEORGE BATCHELOR, '66.

ERRATA

On Page 92 of the Thirteenth Report, Lewis S. Dabney, who wrote the memorial notice of Bigelow, was H. C. 1861, not "1911."

In the 1919 Book, Page 14, Farlow received the degree of LL.D. from Harvard in 1896, not "1866."

In the 1920 Book, Page 9, in the last line of the third stanza of Buswell's Class Ode, the word "rays" should have been days, and the last four lines of the stanza should read,—

"Yet still with the warmth and the fervor of youth,
The flame of affection shall burn
For these scenes unforgotten, and memories loved,
For the days that can never return."

Page 14, the fourth line from the foot of the page "He" should be We.

Page 22, in the fourth line from the end of Storey's notice, "twenty-one" should be thirty-one.

Page 23, the third line from the end of Welles's notice, the word "that" should be stricken out.
